Veterinary Notes – H is for Heart (Part 2) By Rev. Mehitabel

With the exception of coronary artery disease, dogs and cats may suffer from the range of heart problems seen in humans. These include conduction defects and arrhythmias (abnormal beat patterns) that may require pacemakers; viral and bacterial diseases that affect the heart and congenital (birth) abnormalities such as a “hole in the heart”. In addition, certain parasites may invade the heart and cause problems as a result.

Today, I will describe one of the other more common forms of heart disease, that of dilated cardiomyopathy. In dogs, this tends to affect the large and giant breeds from middle age but may also cause sudden death in young boxers and dobermans. An autosomal dominant inheritance is suspected in Irish Wolfhounds and Newfoundlands. This is where a condition is caused by a single gene that is inherited according to simple Mendelian Genetics, and which may be eliminated through selective breeding. The left ventricle of the heart, the main pump for the body, fails with the muscular wall becoming thin and flabby with the result that the ventricle balloons and dilates. The initial signs are exercise intolerance, weight loss and difficulty breathing and some animals may suffer syncope (fainting). Treatment aims to support cardiac function but the prognosis is guarded. Supplementation with the amino acid carnitine can help to avert the disease in some dogs suggesting a biochemical cause for the condition.

In cats, dilated cardiomyopathy is seen in older male cats and presents similarly to the disease in dogs. In addition, hypertrophic cardiomyopathy is an inherited disease of Persian and Maine Coon cats. Here the left ventricle fails to function because of thickening rather than thinning. Signs again include difficulty breathing, cyanosis (blueness) and sudden death. In addition, the condition predisposes to blood clot formation and this may lead to a clot in the main vessels to the hind legs (iliac thrombosis) causing paralysis and extreme coldness of the affected limb. Hypertrophic cardiomyopathy may occur spontaneously or may be associated with hyperthyroidism (over active thyroid which is not uncommon in older cats as a result of a benign tumour of the thyroid gland).

Both dogs and cats may suffer from fibrosis and inflammation of the lining of the heart as a result of various systemic infections. This endocarditis may be associated with small fibrous nodules on the edges of the heart valves which result in heart murmurs (sounds produced when the blood flow in the heart is distorted in some way). These nodules may become detached causing thromboembolic disease, and this is the usual cause of the iliac thrombosis of cats described above.

In summary, cardiac disease is a common problem in dogs and cats. Warning signs in all forms are decreased exercise tolerance, soft, moist coughs and fainting. Congestive cardiac disease is common in the older dog; dilated cardiomyopathy is common in medium/giant breeds and especially Dobermans and Boxers; hypertrophic cardiomyopathy is seen particularly in Persians and Maine Coons; and thromboembolic disease, often affecting the hind limbs, is relatively common in cats. Prompt treatment of all forms improves the prognosis and referral to specialist cardiac centre may be of great benefit.

Physicists have 'solved' mystery of levitation

By Roger Highfield

Levitation has been elevated from being pure science fiction to science fact, according to a study reported today by physicists. In theory the discovery could be used to levitate a person. In earlier work the same team of theoretical physicists showed that invisibility cloaks are feasible.

Now, in another report that sounds like it comes out of the pages of a Harry Potter book, the University of St Andrews team has created an 'incredible levitation effects' by engineering the force of nature which normally causes objects to stick together.

Professor Ulf Leonhardt and Dr Thomas Philbin, from the University of St Andrews in Scotland, have worked out a way of reversing this phenomenon, known as the Casimir force, so that it repels instead of attracts. Their discovery could ultimately lead to frictionless micro-machines with moving parts that levitate. But they say that, in principle at least, the same effect could be used to levitate bigger objects too, even a person.

The Casimir force is a consequence of quantum mechanics, the theory that describes the world of atoms and subatomic particles that is not only the most successful theory of physics but also the most baffling. The force is due to neither electrical charge or gravity, for example, but the fluctuations in all-pervasive energy fields in the intervening empty space between the objects and is one reason atoms stick together, also explaining a "dry glue" effect that enables a gecko to walk across a ceiling.

Now, using a special lens of a kind that has already been built, Prof Ulf Leonhardt and Dr Thomas Philbin report in the New Journal of Physics they can engineer the Casimir force to repel, rather than attract. Because the Casimir force causes problems for nanotechnologists, who are trying to build electrical circuits and tiny mechanical devices on silicon chips, among other things, the team believes the feat could initially be used to stop tiny objects from sticking to each other.

Prof Leonhardt explained, "The Casimir force is the ultimate cause of friction in the nano-world, in particular in some microelectromechanical systems. Such systems already play an important role - for example tiny mechanical devices which triggers a car airbag to inflate or those which power tiny 'lab on chip' devices used for drugs testing or chemical analysis.

Micro or nano machines could run smoother and with less or no friction at all if one can manipulate the force." Though it is possible to levitate objects as big as humans, scientists are a long way off developing the technology for such feats, said Dr Philbin. The practicalities of designing the lens to do this are daunting but not impossible and levitation "could happen over quite a distance".

Prof Leonhardt leads one of four teams - three of them in Britain - to have put forward a theory in a peer-reviewed journal to achieve invisibility by making light waves flow around an object - just as a river flows undisturbed around a smooth rock.

The Order of Web Weavers Crystal Web Mapping Project

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalog your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: wwcw@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly cataloged we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers
